

26 Jun 19

When do you know when it is time to go? Time to act? Not just react. How do we find our place in the universe without losing our face? Our faith? Is it all just perception? Does our perception change everyday in many ways? Do we have to fight for our truth or just let it be~ Know your truth and the rest be damned if need be.

Some people just cannot be understood. Some people are just unredeemable. They are mean and self serving. They are motivated by their inner ugly and there is just no reaching them. They prefer the dark, they will not see the light. So, in the end you have to let them be and save yourself.

Perception is everything in one regard. What is it? The ability to see, to hear, and gain awareness through the senses. Ok, awareness through the senses referring to the five or six depending on your beliefs. I am using senses in two ways here but doesn't it fit ~

I do not refer this any meaning to those with limited intellectual ability, that's different. I am only referring to those who could and don't. I've come to believe that for some the need, the want to be right at any costs, even if they are wrong, perhaps especially if they are wrong means everything to them. It is a shallow victory if you "win". It's like defending an ember smoldering at all costs while the fire rages all around you. Either way you burn.

We cannot control others or the endless stream of shit flowing at us. All we can do is shift our perception. We can decide to rise above the fray. We don't have to fight when we are right. We stand in our truth, damn the fools because in the end the light shines through. Where there is light there is life...